Leadership Development

Leadership and advocacy are key elements within UST. For many students in UST the desire to assume a Team Lead role stems from a positive experience at a community based service activity. The UST Leadership Cabinet is another mechanism to provide students with mentoring specific to leadership development. Central to the Leadership Cabinet is the valuing of all health professions disciplines and interdisciplinary learning.

Meeting quarterly, second year USTers who are leading community outreach activities come together as a group to focus on leadership skills and activities critical for interprofessional collaborative practice. Topics include: defining leadership and identifying critical skills and characteristics of leaders; differentiating between leadership and management; engaging the larger community as a partner in community based programming; asset mapping as it relates to academic-community partnerships; grant writing and program development. Third and fourth year USTers are engaged in these meetings and provide guidance to second year students by providing a context for learning and application of leadership skills in the clinical arena. In addition to bringing back UST student leaders, the Leadership Cabinet also enlists established clinicians and academic leaders to share knowledge and experience as guest speakers.
